VAGRANTS FROM FOREIGN SHIPS

Many Deserting Sailors Leave Their Wages Behind Them.

Masters of foreign ships coming to this port are largely responsible for the spread of the sailor-vagrant evil here. Both the captains of vessels of foreign register, as well as the police, are aware of this fact, the latter painfully so. Desertions of sailors from foreign ships, the majority of which have made long voyages before reaching the Hawaiian Islands, are more frequent than from domestic vessels.

Waterfront Police Officer Flint has reported to the high sheriff that the desertions from such vessels are on the increase, and as there are more vessels in the harbor at present than for some time in the past, the deserters are throwing themselves open to the 5:10 charge of being vagrants, and sooner 5:30 or later will come in contact with the 6:10 police.

The captain of the British ship Argus has reported to Officer Flint that several of his crew have deserted, and he expects a wholesale desertion in a day or two. He was wondering whether or not he should get out warrants to have them arrested, but yesterday had practically decided that this would be a useless procedure. Other captains have taken the same view of the matter, and, as a result, dozens of sailors 4:32 are in the city, rapidly evolving into 4:53 that stage where the police term them vagrants.

It is understood that one of the reasons why foreign ship captains do not follow their men up with warrants, is that there is money due the men. In deserting the ship they forfeit their claim to wages, and the masters are so much the better off from a monetary standpoint. It costs them considerable olar Plant, 6 p. c.... money, however, to procure new crews, but the expense is largely borne by the new men shipped.

Under the laws of the Republic of Hawaii, a ship's captain had to procure a warrant for every deserting lo Railway bonds, $100. sailor, and the man had to be apprehended, if there was any way of seizing, imprisoning and returning him to the vessel from which he had deserted. Unless a foreign consul in Honolulu desires to have a sailor arrested, or the captain feels that he has lost a valuable man, no effort is made by the police to capture him. When these men desert their ships, leaving their wages, or part of them behind, they are generally without much ready cash in their pockets, and it is only a matter of a few days when they are "on their uppers," and fit subjects to enter the vagrant class;
